Trying to Fix a Flat With Just a Pump

I've been fixing a lot of flats this spring while riding my bike for some reason. Not that much is required to fix a flat, but it's essential to take these things on every ride: A pump, little plastic tire irons (to take the tire off), and a patch for the hole.

Well, here's my question. What if the only tool I had was a pump? What would happen if I had a flat? Well, I would pump up the tire, and start riding. But soon what would happen? Yup, flat again pretty quickly. Not a great way to enjoy riding.

It strikes me that this is a great analogy, for our present culture. Let's get pumped up! I've talked with some people who tell me that this is why they come to church. To get a boost for the week. And then next week come back for another one. Stay pumped! Stay up!

But it doesn't last long does it? And soon we need another "boost". I think this is a huge problem for our culture. Always needing to "stay pumped." See the problem? The blind spot?

There is a lot more to being healthy than "staying pumped". At some point you need to put the pump away and go deeper. Take your life apart and find where it's broken, and patch things up. It's harder, and takes a lot more work and effort to be sure. It's easy to ignore the advice. But doesn't fixing the problem first make a lot more sense?

So if you are looking to "stay pumped" if you're flat, here's the message. Go to where it's broken first. Find the hole first and patch things up. Then when you get pumped up, the ride will be much better. And you'll also be better prepared when the next flat comes along.

~ CONCERNS ~

Caring and Prayers to those that have lost loved ones recently.

We share deep sadness with Jonathan, Christopher and the Schmidt family as they mourn the passing of Jean Schmidt on May 25. Jean was a part of the fabric of St. Paul. Services were held here at St. Paul Lutheran on May 31, officiated by Pastor Mark Liscom. She served on council, committees and regularly volunteered. She will be missed. We hold you in heartfelt prayer.

Our thoughts go out to Ardie Barber and family as they honor the life of sister-in-law Jeanette Bangart. As noted in her obituary: She exemplified timeless beauty with her class, charm, grit, grace and unassuming elegance. We are sorry for your loss.
